Arens: West shouldn't help PLO flee

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER lerusalem Post Reporter

DALIAT AL-CARMEL - The government hopes that Yasser Arafat and his followers will not be evacuated from Tripoli, Defence Minister Moshe Arens said here

He said he hoped that the Western nations will not "assist the evacuation of the PLO with their weapons to other locations from which they can continue their terror activities against Israel and non-Israeli targets."

Speaking to reporters after a memorial meeting for the 28 Druse who fell in Lebanon, Arens said that if anybody wishes to help in the evacuation "they should first get a commitment from Arafat that he will lay down his arms and stop all terror activities."

Israel is trying to convince the West of this, but "if we can't convince them to forbid Arafat and his terrorists to operate from anywhere else, we will have to consider the situation and to decide what to do about it," the defence minister said.

The outdoor memorial meeting was preceded by a short prayer service inside the Yad Labanim memorial centre in this largest of Israeli's Druse villages of Israel. The families of the 28 fallen lit can-

The minister, who had just come from Deir-al-Kamar, where he watched the evacuation of the Christians who had been besieged by the Druse for the past three months, said the operation had proceeded "like a Swiss watch."

The fact that Israel had achieved the agreement that made the evacuation possible and that the IDF had carried it out proved that Israel has the trust of both the Christian and Druse communities, BEIRUT (AP). — The battleship USS New Jersey blasted rebel militia positions on the hills overlooking Beirut yesterday after the U.S. marine base came under heavy fire at nightfall, a marine spokesman reported.

'The New Jersey is firing in support of the Multinational Peacekeeping Force," he said.

The marine base received ground-based anti-aircraft fire and rockets in three barrages, and responded with 81mm, mortars and artillery, suffering no casualties, the spokesman reported.

It was the second straight day that the New Jersey had gone into action. It fired its 16-inch (400mm.) guns, the largest afloat in the world, at anti-aircraft positions in the Syrian-held central Lebanese mountains Wednesday after U.S.

Histadrut protests start today

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Histadrut is to begin protest meetings throughout the country today in its campaign for early compensation for price rises and for measures to curb inflation and prevent unemployment.

Some 300 meetings are scheduled for today, Sunday and Monday in the hope of reaching hundreds of thousands of workers.

The meetings are scheduled for breaks or evening hours, to minimize losses to the economy. But the Histadrut is contemplating other steps, such as "closing" entire regions, Histadrut Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel said yesterday.

The immediate issue is the labour federations's demand for an advance on the cost-of-living allowance. The Histadrut is pressing for a 17.9 per cent rise in the allowance to be given in the next few days, about the time your bank account shows an overdraft, a labour federation official said.

The employers are willing to pay the advance, but the deal was torpedoed by an argument over the compensation due with the paychecks for January.

According to the overall C-o-L allowance agreement, the next rise is due with that paycheck. The C-o-L agreement provides that workers will be compensated for 90 per cent of the price rises if ths C-o-L index for October, November and December rises by more than 30 per cent.

The Histadrut insists that the 90 per cent linkage be maintained, and has sharply criticized the Treasury for insisting on an 85 per cent linkage in January, if a new deal on an advance is concluded.

Meshel aruged that if Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad wishes to keep the rate of compensation down to 85 per cent, he should restrain the price rises, for example through subsidizing essential commodities.

The Histadrut demanded that the government also curb unemployment and give workers some ray of hope, for example by developing new projects.

Meshel noted that in Yeroham, for example, unemployment has rose by 15.2 per cent in November, the Central Bureau of Statistics announced yesterday. November's inflation brought to some 40 per cent the erosion in wages registered in the last two months. Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad said that the figures prove that private and public consumption, wages and the standard of living must all he reduced. Cohen-Oread added that in the coming months wages will have to fall. "This can be done in a controlled way, easing the situation for workers," he said. The minister stressed that future rates of inflation will be a function of the cuts in private and public expenditure, and that these will be implemented through a cut in the government budget, "including the Defence Ministry budget." With the announcement of the rise in the CPI, the Treasury adjusted the travel tax to IS4,750 as of midnight last night.

The rise in the CPI brought it to 1768.5 points on a 1980 baseline of 100. During the last II months prices have increased 160.5 per cent, which means that 1983 will be the most inflationary year ever recorded in Israel.

In the last 12 months prices have gone up by 174.9 per cent, with the highest rates concentrated in the last two months. Taking into account October's rate of inflation, price hikes totalled 39.5 per cent since the latest compensation for Reacting to these figures, the Treasury spokesman said that they were expected, and blamed the policies of former finance minister oram Andor.

The current pace of price increases is the result of the need to out the large subsidies that existed on a number of goods and services. It also reflects the 'hidden inflation' that existed until some months ago," the spokesman said.

The Treasury added that its policies are designed to solve Israel's balance of payments problems, and that the steps being taken will bring down inflation

The Central Bureau of Statistics said yesterday that prices during the first two week of December are already 6 to 7 per cent higher than the average level for November. This means that the rate of inflation for December could be between 12 and 15 per cent If December's inflation reaches 15 per cent, it will bring the rate of inflation for 1983 to 200 per cent, and 60 4 per cent for the last quarter of the year.

Bureau officials said vesterday that inflation is undoubtedly rising more rapidly now than it was during the first nine months of the year, although, they said, it is very early to estimate at what level the pace of price hikes will stabilize uself. Economic observers pointed out

By AVI TEMKIN

Israel's request for American aid for 1985 was presented yesterday at simultaneous ceremonies in Washington and Jerusalem.

Although the request does not contain a final sum that Israel is requesting, it states that the uncovered gap in foreign currency expected for 1985 totals $3.3 billion. This sum includes the need to finance defence purchases.

Treasury officials conceded vesterday that during Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's visit to the U.S. last month, the figure that the Americans seemed likely to agree to was $2.6b., of which $1.4b. will be granted as military aid and $1.2b. as civilian aid.

The Finance Ministry said yesterday that the total expenditure in foreign currency linked to defence imports will be $3b, in 1983, but will rise to $4b, in each of the coming two years,

The ministry added that Israel had to spend some $3.6b, to repay loans and interest during 1983. Some $900m. of this were paid to the U.S., a sum roughly equal to the total civilian aid the U.S. granted for 1984.

In a news conference at the conclusion of his two days of talks with British leaders, Jemayel said that the foreign ministers of Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and Syria will meet in Damascus on Sunday to confirm the date and venue.

When the talks resume, he said, we expect to formulate the basis on which reconciliation can be achieved and define the terms of reference of a new government of national unity." On the agenda for the foreign ministers meeting will be the question of the evacuation of Yasser Arafat and his PLO supporters, Jemayel said, Jemayel's visit included meetings with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and opposition leaders, as well as an audience with the queen.

He emphasized to Thatcher that it is important that British troops remain as part of the Mutlinational Peacekeeping Force, saying they were respected by all the contending factions.

Jemayel warned of the dangers of a premature withdrawal of the force. An "untimely withdrawal will have grave consequences," and will "undermine all the efforts towards continuing the promising process of reconciliation," he told the news conference.

According to reports from Lebanon quoting sources close to Arafat, the evacuation is indeed expected to begin around midnight tomorrow and be completed within 24 hours.

For the past few weeks, Arafat has expressed his fear that Israel would attempt to prevent his departure by sea. He was reported to be seeking an alternative evacuation route by land through Syria, but according to Arab reports, Damascus had vetoed this.

Two of the ships will make their way to Tunisia, and the other three to South Yemen, according to the Greek spokesman.

Despite the impending departure of Arafat and his men, the situation in Tripoli remained tense and local residents were reported as saying yesterday that at least 20 persons had been killed or wounded in a new surge of artillery, rocket and automatic weapons fire.

Washington wants Arafat to leave Lebanon freely

Jerusalem Post Staff

The U.S. has in recent days transmitted to Israel its opinion that PLO leader Yasser Arafat and 4,000 of his men should be allowed to leave Tripoli unhindered.

The U.S. feeling was relayed through unspecified diplomatic contacts, but it is considered likely that U.S. special Middle East envoy Donald Rumsfeld will raise the issue in talks scheduled today with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Political observers in Jerusalem said last night that Shamir's declaration yesterday that Israel would treat Arafat as an enemy should be treated has increased uncertainty regarding Israel's intentions about the PLO evacuation.

Israel has made feverish efforts during the past few days to persuade the UN and the countries involved in the PLO rescue to ensure that at least the terrorists do not take their weapons with them. Defence Minister Moshe Arens yesterday called on "all those enlightened nations that think Arafat should be helped" to demand that he and his men lay down their arms.

Rumsfeld, who arrived in Jersusalem yesterday from Damascus, is expected to reiterate the basic U.S. premise regarding the PLO evacuation: the departure of Arafat and 4,000 of his men represents part of the main objective of getting all foreign forces out of Lebanon.

Among other issues to be discussed, Rumsfeld is expected to brief Shamir on his recent talks in Arab capitals, particularly with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel-Halim Khaddam yesterday. Last night the U.S. envoy met with Foreign Ministry Director-General David Reliable sources said yesterday that although no change has been observed in Syria's position, the fact that Rumsfled met with Khaddam at all during such a period of U.S.-Syrian tension is to be considered a good sign. Observers point with guarded optimism to Rumsfeld's Syrian visit as a possible attempt to renew efforts to bring Syria into an agreement on Lebanon.

Police 'optimistic' about solving Danny Katz murder

By DAVID RUDGE Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. - Galilee police chief Nitzav-Mishneh Meir Sadeh vesterday refused to confirm or deny a newspaper report that five suspects had been arrested in connection with the murder of 15-year-old Danny Katz.

The front-page report in yesterday's Ma'ariv said five residents of Western Galilee were remanded into custody for 15 days by the Acre Magistrates Court on Wednesday on suspicion of being involved in the murder.

According to Ma'ariv, the court prohibited publication of the identity of the suspects.

Sadeh told the The Jerusalem Post that he hoped the news blackout would be lifted in the next few days. "I am optimistic that our inquiries are being conducted along the right lines and that we will soon be able to announce that we have solved the case," he said.

The Jerusalem Post learned last night that police have carried out a reconstruction of the events leading up to Danny's disappearance from his home in the Danya neighbourhood last Thursday and the discovery of his mutilated body in a Galilee pine forest near Moshav Ya'ad two days later.

Police barricaded the two entrances to Danva for a few hours yesterday afternoon and apparently checked vehicles leaving the area. Sadeh declined to explain this action. "Saying anything at this stage might hamper our inquiries," he

Final memporary injunction stops ban Jahariya buses get Sabbath reprieve

The buses will travel as a result of jemporary injunction obtained by Nahariya municipal council sterday in the High Court of ustice. The council contends that ansport Minister Haim Corfu's rective to curtail Shabbat bus seres in their city (and in Afula and enzareth) was an arbitrary act sed upon coalition politics, and ant that Nahariya would suffer serimination compared with inifa, where Shabbat bus service continue unhindered.

Justice Moshe Beisky directed and Ben-Shaul to show cause hin 45 days why they should not cind the ban.

According to the "status quo" agreement on religious matters reached by David Ben-Gurion and leaders of the Orthodox parties in 1948, bus service was to be suspended on Shabbat and other Jewish holy days all over the country except in Haifa, where buses had operated on those days when the state was proclaimed. Despite the agreement. Egged soon established Shabbat bus service in several parts of the country - including Nahariya - and this service has continued unhampered by all governments so far.)

In an interview with The Jerusalem Past during a visit to Acre yesterday. Sharir said he has no doubt that the stoppage of public transport to and from Nahariya would harm the tourism in Western Galilee. He intends to raise the issue in the cabinet, he said.

Knesset member Mordechai Virshubski (Shinui) said yesterday he will present a private member's bill that would authorize local authorities to operate their own public transport systems "so that Israelis in non-Orthodox communities may travel as they please on the sabbath."

In Tel Aviv, the Labour Party issued a statement condemning the ban since it "would upset a service that has been in existence since the state was established - a service that the government now wishes to stop because of pressure from it religious coalition partners.

Double-header at Bloomfield

By PAUL KOHN Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. - First and second in the National League again provide the football fare at the Bloomfield Stadium in Jaffa, where Hapoel Tel Aviv play Maccabi Yavne and Betar Jerusalem entertain Maccabi Haifa.

Hancel Tel Aviv lead the table by two points from Betar, but were not impressive in their 1:0 win in Haifa last Saturday, Only fine goalkeeping by Beierano and a sterling game by Yaacov Eckhause in defence enabled the Tel Avivians to acquire those three points. It will need an improved showing to satisfy their home fans against plucky little Yavne, and Moshe Sinai, Gil Landau, Shabtay Levy and Rifat Turk are under pressure to provide it, Avi Eisenberg is the man to watch in the Yavne attack: last week he notched a 90th minute goal to down Bnei Yehuda.

Uri Malmillian appears to be an extremely doubtful starter for Betar. Although not fully fit he played for the last 15 minutes against Lod on Saturday. It is hard to explain why he did this, as Betar were already 2-0 up at that stage. Why risk Betar's most precious player?

By now Betar must be feeling totally at home at Bloomfield as they have played all their "home" games there this season. Their forwards have scored 21 goals compared to Maccabi Haifa's meagre nine goal tally, but Haifa should soon show marked improvement once Zhai Armeli blends in as Maccabi Netanya continue to flounder at the foot of the table, and they can say goodbye to even the faintest hope of retaining the championship title they won so easily last season. For Netanya it is now a light to get out of the relegation zone. New coach Arie Redler is trying to tighten discipline at the club, and star defender David Pizanti was in trouble with the coach this week. If the team can strike form they should win in Petah Tikva, but who can tell anything about Maccabi Netanya this season? They have won only one game and conceded 22 goals, and won should not forget that Maccabi Petah Tikva won 2-0 in Beersheba last Saturday.

Fans at the Hatikva Quarter will see their Bnei Yehuda face the team from the Yemenite Quarter in the "little Tel Aviv derby." Shimshon started the season well and beat Hakoah 3-0 last week, but Bnei Yehuda have been a dismal disappointment to their supporters. If Bnei Yehuda lose again, I would not bet any money at all on Yankele Grundman keeping his job as

Prices of printing services in Jerusalem irk publishers

By AARON SITTNER Jerusalem Post Reporter

Undernanding government agencies who pay "any price quoted" for printing services have driven prices so high in Jerusalem that many book publishers here are taking their production jobs elsewhere even abroad.

This was one of the complaints raised yesterday at an emergency meeting of Jerusalem-based book publishers, at the offices of Magnes Press publishing company. # Agency promises newcomers that it will fight for housing

By JUDY SIEGEL Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Jewish Agency has promised to help the various olim associations in their fight for housing and jobs for newcomers.

The heads of eight olim associations met yesterday with Jewish Agency Executive chairman Arye Dulzin and Agency aliya department director-general Yehuda Dominitz. Represented were the Association of Americans and Canadians in Israel, the British Olim Association, and heads of the two Russian olim associations and of those from South Africa, Holland, North Africa and Latin

The association representatives expressed anger that some eight years after the Horev Commission on aliya and absorption recommended a single address for aiding newcomers, the Jewish Agency and the Absorption Ministry continue to divide responsibility between them. They also maintained that 20,000 recent olim are waiting for permanent housing.

"They see no hope of ever having an apartment of their own," said the association heads. The government's policy of reducing the number of government-owned flats allocated to new olim and offering instead partial mortgages for flats on the private market was criticized. Many olim, the spokesmen said, lack the money to make up the difference between the mortgages and the cost of the flats.

There are worrisome signs of increased unemployment among new olim, and increased difficulty in newcomers finding jobs, they said.

Dulzin said that relations between him and Absorption Minister Aharon Uzan — tense for over a year - are now relaxed, and that the two have agreed that the joint committee of government ministers and Jewish Agency officials will meet regularly, possibly once a month, to coordinate policy.

Dominitz promised that he would go with the olim association heads to government officials to lobby for more housing.

Yediot Aharonot, March 8, 1983

At a press conference held in Tel Aviv on March 8, 1983, NRG was put to the test of having to protect an engine, when run completely without engine oil.

The engine oil was completely removed from a Ford Cortina, which was then driven in the presence of journalists. At the end of the test drive, the temperature gauge did not indicate engine over-heating. This means that NRG had coated all parts of the engine, protecting them during the 10 critical seconds in which 80% of engine wear is caused, and made it possible to drive the car over 95 km. of hilly roads. The car was driven again during the Technology 83 Fairs, and found to be completely serviceable. NRG is now used to protect engines in all sectors of the Israeli and world economy, as verifiable from many letters that can be seen at our office.

NRG is the No. I American wonder liquid. It is completely reliable, and is providing savings of millions of dollars in industry and transport, in Israel and abroad. NRG extends the service life of the engine and transmission. NRG gives you improved power -- more pull, reduces fuel consumption by up to 20'., in industry up to 29%. Its use drastically reduces the need for repairs and reconditioning. NRG lowers engine and transmission noise level, frees gummed up piston rings, and minimizes oil consumption and engine overheating. With NRG, you get easier morning starting - NRG is the best and cheapest insurance for your engines and equipment.

NRG was the subject of a series of tests, carried out at four well-known laboratories abroad and at the Israel Standards Institution (where it was tested in a special installation).

If you are not yet using NRG, your maintenance costs are unnecessarily high, and you are definitely wasting time and money.

NRG should be used just once a year - you an do it yourself. There is also an NRG fuel additive. #### Caller demands ransom for holy tunic

PARIS (AP). - The thieves who stole the "Tunic of Jesus" will return it in exchange for the release of three prisoners and a 300,000-franc (IS3.5 million) donation to the outlawed Polish labour union, Solidarity, according to a newspaper report Wednesday.

The leftist daily Liberation said an anonymous telephone caller delivered those demands in three calls to the newspaper's office.

The tunic, which church authorities say ranks with the Shroud of Turin. was stolen late Monday or early Tuesday from a church crypt in the northern suburb of Argenteuil where it has been kept since 800. The maroon, seamless woollen robe is alleged to have been worn by Jesus before his crucifixtion and said to have been the one on which Roman soldiers cast lots while he died on the cross.

The caller said the robe would not be returned until three suspected members of the French anarchist terrorist group Direct Action were released from prison, Liberation reported.

Bolivian cabinet quits after strike

LA PAZ (Reuter). - The Bolivian cabinet resigned Wednesday night after a 48-hour general strike paralyzed the country's economy.

The move was intended to allow the formation of a government of national unity and to establish a political and economic truce, Foreign Minister Jose Ortiz Mercado told a press conference,

In their letter of resignation to President Hernan Siles Zuazo, the 18 ministers accused the opposition-dominated Senate of planning a "constitutional coup" against the left-wing government

The cabinet quit after a stormy debate in the upper house, where centrist and right-wing senators called on the government to justify tough austerity measures adopted last month.

The austerity package, which included a 60 per cent devaluation, led to a 24-hour general strike on November 21 and this week's 48hour stoppage.

NATO bemoans gap with East

WASHINGTON (Reuter). -NATO commander General Bernard Rogers said yesterday the ailiance's resources are so small that it might be forced to turn to nuclear weapons if the Soviet Union and its allies start a conventional war.

"Should NATO be attacked conventionally by the Warsaw Pact, I would have to request the release of nuclear weapons fairly quickly," he told a news conference.

But he said he would much prefer NATO countries to increase their spending to enable the alliance to sustain a longer conventional war. NATO manpower was short.

munition stocks were low and there was not enough pre-positioned war equipment in Western Europe to support NATO forces for very long,

Rebels claim credit for blast

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP). -Nine Soviets and a dozen other persons were killed by a bomb at Kabul University in the Afghan capital last week. Afghan rebel sources said yesterday. Among those killed were two Soviet advisers, a doctor and six Russian-language translators, according to the rebel sources. The report could not be independently confirmed.

Many others were said to have been injured in the blast, which reportedly demolished a wing of the education faculty.

Moslem insurgents, claiming responsibility for the explosion, said a high-intensity time bomb was planted in the basement of the building. Western analysts said Afghan guerrillas increasingly are resorting to blowing up buildings in Kabul in their battle against the Marxist government.

Philippine minister determined to quit

MANILA (AP). - Ignoring President Ferdinand Marcos's rejection of his resignation, Education Minister Onofre O. Corpuz bade his staff goodbye yesterday and accused unidentified officials of forming a "mafia" around Marcos to isolate the president from the maiority of Filipinos.

He tendered his resignation November 25 and was reported by Manila newspapers as saying he was quitting all his government posts despite Marcos's announcement December 7 that he had rejected the resignation. Corpuz's resignation was to take effect yesterday.

In another development, a lawyer said yesterday he has evidence the airport uniform used by the alleged assassin of Benigno Aquino was part of the Philippine military's inventory of disguises.

Attorney Lupino Lazaro said the evidence supports the theory that Rolando Galman was "a fall guy, not an assassin."

Last arms talks adjourned

VIENNA (Reuter). - The East-West troop reduction talks in Vienna, the last major forum of arms talks still open, adjourned yesterday with no date fixed for their resumption, a Western spokesman said.

Dutch Ambassador Willem de Vos van Steenwijk told reporters that the NATO countries had proposed that the discussions restart on January 26.

"We regret that the East has neither accepted this proposal nor proposed an alternative date, nor provided any explanation for this procedure," he said.

The decision not to fix a date for resumption after the regular Christmas break came amid a sharp deterioration in East-West relations that followed the arrival in Western Europe of new U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles,

Some of the missiles are to be deployed by NATO in areas also covered by the talks on limiting conventional forces in Central

Last month the Soviet Union walked out of Geneva talks with the U.S. on limiting medium-range nuclear weapons.

Argentina replaces scores of top generals and admirals

BUENOS AIRES (Reuter). -. More than half the generals in Argentina's army and two thirds of the admirals in the navy have been forced into retirement by the country's new civilian president, Raul Alfonsin.

The Defence Ministry said Wednesday night that Alfonsin had appointed new commanders for the armed forces. All those senior to them will have to quit the services. Gen. Julio Fernandez Torres becomes the new chief of staff of the armed forces.

Alfonsin appointed rear-admiral Ramon Arosa as the new navy commander, forcing 16 of the 25 ad-

The communique announcing the appointments promised a thorough reform of the armed forces. "The armed forces will be given a firm doctrine of national defence. eliminating once and for all from their principles and training the socalled doctrine of national security, which has caused so much damage to the internal life and international image of the country," it said.

military juntas that ruled Argentina from 1976 until June, 1982 will be court-martialled on charges of murder, illegal detention and torture.

Ancient skull spurs murder confession

CHESTER, England (Reuter). - A man who killed his wife more than two decades ago was sentenced to life imprisonment here yesterday because of an ancient skull.

When a young woman's skull was dug up near his former home this year, Peter Reyn-Bardt, 57, thought that police had finally found his wife, Malika, whom he hacked to pieces and buried in 1961.

Tests later showed that the skull was almost 16 centuries old. But by then he had told his story to police.

Reyn-Bardt's 1959 wedding was a marriage of convenience to a girl he had met four days earlier in a coffee bar.

He decided to marry because he believed his job as an airline official was endangered by his homosexuality. The couple split up after a few months, his lawyer said at the trial. He killed his wife when she returned to demand money and threatened to expose that he was homosexual.

U.S. battleship packs punch, but may be giant sitting duck

WASHINGTON (Reuter). — The U.S. battleship New Jersey fired its guns in anger Wednesday for the first time since the Vietnam war, but the giant ship's military value is debated. In backing a $326 million modernization of the 58,000-ton ship, the U.S. Navy argued that refurbishing the vessel and arming it with the latest weaponry was the best way to strengthen the navy's firepower

But critics in Congress attacked the refitting of the battleship, which was launched in 1942 and saw action in the Pacific during World' War II. It is too vulnerable to modern missiles and land-based bombers, they said.

Supporters of the big ship are winning the day, however, and another old battleship, the Iowa, is being refitted. The navy also plans to refit its two remaining World War II battleships, the Wisconsin Tomahawk missiles, which can hit and Missouri, The New Jersey fired its 16-inch (40 centimetre) guns in sea trials last year, but the 11 rounds it lobbed against Syrian-occupied territory in Lebanon on Wednesday were its first hostile shots since Vietnam.

In addition to its nine 16-inch guns mounted on three turrets, the New Jersey has been fitted with advanced new guns and electronics.

It has nuclear-capable targets 2,400 kilometres away; Harpoon missiles for use against sea targets up to 55 kilometres away; and a Phalanx gun system for use against nearby targets.

In addition, its 1,600-member crew uses electronics designed to jam enemy sighting and targeting equipment and armour plate to withstand anything short of a nuclear-tipped missile, a navy spokesman said.

CARDIFF (Reuter). - Yugoslavia won a last-minute reprieve against Wales on Wednesday night to boos: their chances of reaching next year's European Soccer Championship finals in France. Wales looked set to be the only country from the British Isles to qualify when they led the Yugoslavs 1-0 with 10 minutes to go in the

When asked how the government and in particular the Committee of Ministers on Legislation could have put an unworkable law like the Law for Taxation in Inflation through the Knesset, Nissim revealed that former Finance Minister Yoram Aridor by-passed the committee.

"Former Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz and the present minister, Yigal Cohen-Orgad, got the Committee of Ministers on Legislation to vet all financial legislation. But former Finance Minister Yoram Aridor left the Committee of Economic Ministers in sole charge of financial legislation," he noted. 'And that explains the results."

Nissim believes that the Knesset has only itself to blame if it makes the impression of being idle. He said: "Each successive Knesset works less and less, and the pre-

You can imagine what far-reaching significance that legislation has for the business world. But on the first reading, of all the 120 MKs, only five spoke on the proposed law. In former Knessets, a law like that could require more than one full sitting day. The first reading of the Artists' Rights Law was over in 70 minutes. Only a handful had anything to say in the NISSIM SAYS that the coalition must bear most of the blame for MKs' inactivity in the debates on important legislative proposals. But he stresses that the quality of the Knesset candidates in general has deteriorated dramatically in each successive Knesset, "They want to take part in debates only if they're sure of attracting publicity. When they see they're not getting any coverage, or that the issue attracts minimal public interest, most of the MKs just don't bother with the issue in the plenum or even in commit-they talked about everything except the legislation," he said.

Nissim observes that the nonparticipation of MKs when they cannot get publicity extends to other Knesset work apart from debates on legislation. "The Tenth Knesset does not merit the title 'legislature' so much as the title dining club," he said, "Three opposition MKs do the most, as it happens, to preserve the dignity of the Knesset: Moshe Shahal and Shevah Weiss of Labour, and Mordechai

"The old-fashioned appointments committee was better and a lot more honest and fair," he said.

Nor does Nissim agree with the idea of constituency elections. They would, he says, put men into the Knesset on the basis of local demands rather than national imperatives.

THE JUSTICE MINISTER explained that the Committee of Ministers on Legislation is the only cabinet committee that meets regularly, at least once a week and sometimes more, and makes full use of the views of the bench, the legal profession, the academic world and the public in the lengthy process of preparing legislation.

The Justice Ministry has only eight employees handling legislation, he said, in addition to their other special assignments. Its budget does not permit hiring any

Since however, so much work has to be done that does not brook delays, the minister said he had engaged on a contract basis several top legal experts to research legislation and produce proposals and drafts.

The minister quoted as an example the need for legislation to combat today's increasingly sophisticated crimes. "We had no simple answer in the law for theftby-computer," he said. "So instead of going through the traditional lengthy process of studying the problem, which can take many years, I engaged a 50-year-old retired judge, to suggest legislation against computer crimes. He's working on a contract basis. He'll consult with computer engineers. and he'll supply us with a solid basis on which to prepare a new law, within a real-time frame," Nissim

Other authorities had been engaged in fields like the penal code, the Companies Law, legislation on arrests and searches, and rules of evidence.

Turning to the controversial question of the Basic Laws, which are designed to serve as the country's constitution, Nissim explained that the constitutional concept must in his view be based on mutual understanding and on con-account security considerations; the problem of public order; and the issue of personal status," he explained "The Basic Law Human Rights is a specially sensitive area in which balance is essential.

He said that "Israel's struggle for survival and its religious structure are the two fundamental elements affecting constitutional legislation at the present time."

"But I believe I've overcome obstacles and objections from various quarters and I've made progress," he said with conviction.

"Immediately, one has to think of crazy right-wing Jews," he says. "Not settlers, because they express themselves in other ways." Here, he hints at rifle shots into bakeries in Nablus. He is thinking, instead, of quiet professionals, trained in the army. But not too well trained, because the grenades didn't go off.

"The motive is obvious revenge for the No. 18 bus. They have access, perhaps to the grenades. Probably one or two of them are in the army.

HE TAKES another sip of his heavily sugared cocoa.

"Secondly, TNT was the name of an organization that may or may not have existed a few years ago. I think somebody borrowed the name. For those types, it has a nice ring to it.

"It wasn't settlers, because it has to be somebody who prefers actions to words - not that the settlers don't act, taking the law into their own hands occasionally. But they have more straightforward ways of expressing their opinions.

No, if it was Jews, then it was a small group, a group that is led by somebody with a lot of experience and with the self-discipline at least for awhile, to keep quiet.

"THEORY NUMBER TWO:

Arabs who want to provoke internal turmoil among the Jews. What's called provocation. There have been things like that before. Arabs stealing army uniforms and then bursting into homes in refugee camps, slapping the owner around, stealing a few grushim. In Gaza in the '70s, for example, that was happening about once every two months.

"Anyway, the Arab theory isn't too bad. It works like this: they plant the bombs on Mt. Zion, and then, to confuse us a little, put one in Beit Safafa, near the mosque. It creates bad business between Christians and Jews, which is never a bad thing for the cause.

You remenber that Islamic fundamentalist cell we broke up a few weeks ago. They have taken a lot of credit for actions against Jews, Moslems and Christians. Against the Jews, for being Jews. Against the Christians for not being Moslems, and against Moslems who didn't behave like Moslems.

Before you ask, let me tell you. It's not that difficult to grab a case of grenades fron an army truck in the Bekaa, a convoy that's stopped so the drivers can take a leak or grab a cup of coffee. It happens all the time. So that would explain the consecutive numbering of the grenades.

"Besides, there are plenty of mixed-up Jews ready to sell grenades to anybody - and we figure there are at least 2,000 stolen grenades floating around the

"The only problem with the theory is the loose grenade in the Jewish Quarter parking lot. It wasn't set to go off. It was just there, like it fell out of a box.

can be plugged if you remember that the Arabs are doing it to make it look like Jews were doing it.

"But even that hole in the theory

The problem with the loose grenade is that it means the terrorists can afford to lose one of their weapons - and that's not the situation with Arab terrorists." HE FINISHES his cup of cocoa and begins to get up.

What about Theory Three? "Oh, that's pretty easy - underworld types aren't exactly sophisticated about the nuances of Christian institutions. And they also have 'patriotic motives.' "It's not difficult for them to get their hands on a few grenades, and surely they have no problems in popping into Beit Safafa on a Friday afternoon - they're in and out of there for their own criminal purposes regularly.

"They wouldn't stick out like a metre-long thorn the way somebody from Kach or wherever might if they went into the village.

They're highly emotional people, the underworld types who use grenades. The Number 18 bus starts in Katamonim, their home territory, and so they want revenge. It doesn't matter to them whether the target is Christian, Moslem, pro-Israel, anti-Israel. All they want to do is get their revenge on Arabs, whoever the Arabs may be. That's an easy theory - and for them, anybody who isn't Jewish is Arab.

"We'll concentrate on the first two theories. But the third one is iust as reasonable.

SO THAT'S the problem facing the detectives working on the case. There's a lot of pressure on them to come up with a solution. At least the mayor has spoken out, if no other politician has yet condemned the attempted grenade attack. The press is full of the story.

Detectives on the force for a long time will explain whenever they get the chance that real-life is not Hollywood, and that crimes don't always get solved very quickly. A lot do get solved within 24 hours or 72 hours. But the bigger ones, the more complicated ones, can take much longer.

Indeed, back at the cafe, as we were walking out, the detective grabbed me by the arm.

"We'll solve the case, I'm sure. But it won't happen quickly. Teddy Kollek believes it's possible to catch the people who put the grenades on Mt. Zion. I agree. But" - and here he is telling me why he took me out for a drink -- "you've got to understand that it won't happen over-

COCOF CHARTER 1

THE QUESTION being asked here was whom did Defence Minister Moshe Arens meet during his flying return visit this week to the Big Apple? Hardly a week had passed since he called at the White House, the Pentagon and other good addresses in the District of Columbia, along with Premier Yitzhak Shamir, Officially Arens returned to New York to address the Yeshiva University 59th annual Hanukka dinner and special convocation. The university awarded him and U.S. Ambassador to the UN, Jeane Kirkpatrick, honorary doctorates. 'Also scheduled was a speech to the prestigious Foreign Affairs Forum.

But it's known that the defence minister definitely met past and present luminaries in President Ronald Reagan's administration, such as former secretary of state Gen. Alexander Haig, and No. 3 at the State Department, Lawrence Eagleburger. Haig supposedly gave the green light for Ariel Sharon to take us into Lebanon. Maybe Arens wanted his advice on how to extricate us from Arik's plonter?

While Arens' aides were terribly discreet about their boss' chat with Eagleburger, those who should know guessed that such a VIP would not leave his warm Washington office for the pouring cold of Manhattan just to discuss the previous day's victory of the Washington Redskins over the Dallas Cowboys. We can only suppose they chatted about how to get the Marines out of Beirut in time for Reagan's announcement, expected in mid-February, that his campaign for reelection has begun. Another likely subject was some financial help from Uncle Sam to keep the Shamir-Arens government afloat awhile, Incidentally, Arens stayed in the same suite in the Regency Hotel where Shamir had stayed the previous week.

THE MOST ominius news for the ly eroding the real income of the vast majority of Israel's workers was UNLIKE THE prime minister, Arens did not meet hotel neighbour Shimon Peres. Wonder whether Shamir and the Labour Party chairman talked only about a national unity government, or did they swap complaints about David Levy and Yitzhak Rabin?

The highlight of Arens' quickie visit was his brilliant Zionist speech at Yeshiva University to some 1,600 donors. They were palpably discomfited by the Israeli leader's reference to the failure of the American Jewish leadership to protest loudly during the years of the Holocaust, and were even less comfortable, it seemed, when he spoke of aliya. Seasoned observers of such affairs say they have never encountered such a stony silence during a speech by an Israeli VIP.

The university dinner was a classic of its kind. Donors' proximity to the head table was a function of the size of their donations. As Yeshiva University President Dr. Norman Lamm and Chairman Herbert Tenzer read out the rolls of givers, one could almost see showers of greenbacks floating down from the balconies above the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, where it all took place. As they say in the community, a donation of $100,000 makes you a "good" Jew; half a million makes you a "cherished" Jew, one million big ones turns you into "a leader." If you have it to give away, for two million you can be an "inspiration to your people," and beyond that, you become "a light unto the U.S. AMBASSADOR to Israel Samuel Lewis and wife Sallie have been enjoying their home leave, and are being toasted all over Washington. One surmises that Lewis has been sounding out the powers that be about his future. It's known that he will definitely end his tour as ambassador in Tel Aviv late in 1984, at the end of his seventh year there.

The Lewises were given a royal welcome at the ZOA annual convention in Baltimore with ZOA chairman Alan Resnick presenting the ambassador with the Louis Brandeis Award.

NEW YORK's Mayor Ed Koch is always good for a sharp reaction when he believes that someone at the UN, which he once described to me as "that den of anti-Semitic iniquity," has gone too far. He decried the remarks of Libyan UN delegate, Ali Treiki as "an absolute disgrace." Treiki had oharged "the Jewish Zionists in the U.S. with attempting to destroy Americans." Treiki also spoke of "Jews in New York owning pornographic cinemas, seeking to debase the American people." Israel's ambassador to the UN, Yehuda Blum, commented, in a rare display of wit, "I will not compete with Dr. Treiki in his expertise about pornography.

Other speakers were veteran anti-Zionist Noam Chomsky and Prof. Fred Dube. whose courses at the State University of New York have led to his being charged with presenting Zionism as a form of racism.

These are the superpowers of Israel's labour scene; the "nasties," who have it in their power to bring the economy to a virtual halt, play havoc with the social fabric of the country and bring any finance minister to his knees - and to his senses — if they so wish.

The heads of the electricity Mekorot national water works, El Al and the port workers, to mention only a few of the constituent groups, have not hesitated in the past to flex their muscles ominously when they felt the interests of their highly paid members to be threatened by talk of new austere, economic policies.

There was a growing feeling that the Histadrut leadership was not sufficiently militant in representing the interests of the salaried workers, and certainly not of the best paid among them.

refusing to deal with the public in the myriad offices that administer the Israeli Welfare State, and the other ramified governmental bureaucracies on which so many citizens are dependent. We went to speak to the head of the Civil Servants Union, Reuven Ben-Ami, to find out what the sanctions were all about, how they had worked, and what was bothering his constituents.

BEN-AMI, who seems to be clearly aware of the limitations of his union's power to wreak havoc, readily admitted that the sanctions had been less than total. But they had made the point they were meant to

The Civil Servants Union, he explains, directly represents twothirds of the 60,000 civil servants who work for the government. The remaining third are represented by various professional unions, such as the engineers, the academicians, the government nurses and others. They split away from the main body of the civil servants to press their vanced training.

The Civil Servants Union represents them, too, on common interests that go beyond salaries. What is characteristic of the 40,000 civil servants in the Standard Pay Scale grades, whom Ben-Ami represents, is that 40 per cent of them are women and more than two-thirds receive salaries that are below the national average salary (which in October stood at a monthly gross of

THE LARGE proportion of women members, he admits, explains the less-than-full implementation of this week's sanctions: "Women, after all, have other commitments in their homes and to their families, and it is a known fact that they are less prone to strike why was his hope they are vanguard of the Histadrut-initiated reactions to the Cohen-Orgad policies? For both general and specific reasons, explains Ben-Ami. The general refers to the Histadrut's opposition to Cohen-Orgad's announced intention of cent in the next few months. "For all the problems we had with his predecessor, Aridor, we did have an agreement with him to maintain the real level of wages until the expiration of the current wage agreements next March 31," "Now the real value of wages has been slashed by at least 30 per cent during the past few months due to the massive devaluation and the sharp cuts in the subsidies for basic commodities. I know there will be a cost-of-living allowance in February, but our members simply can't wait that long.

"We will never agree to the game Cohen-Orgad is trying to play; to make agreement on the payment of an advance in December, conditional on our agreeing to cut back the size of the full allowance in February from 90 per cent to 85 per cent of the three-month rise in the

"Our members, especially, most of whom are in the lower half of the salary scales, can't afford to agree

BUT THE civil servants also have specific complaints, mainly Cohen-Orgad's decision to cut deeply into the global overtime and vehicle allowance payments that are such an integral part of their salaries.

Ben-Ami admits, wearily, that the civil servants suffer from an image problem. This problem tempts ministers of finance on budgetcutting jags to pick on these items and on the claimed overstaffing of government offices as easy targets which naturally win public and media support.

"It would seem that failures in governmental economic policies, such as we are experiencing now, require the finding of scapegoats, and we're usually 'it'."

Ben-Ami's own reference to the civil servants' image problem presents a convenient opportunity to raise the question: is it really only an image problem or are the working. or rather "non-working," practices that characterize so many government offices not legitimate targets for a major shake-out.

A GOOD PART of the problem, Ben-Ami insists, is that the civil servants — the receptionists, switchboard operators, tax assessors, customs officials, secretaries and the like - are in the forefront of the confrontation between notalways-popular government policies and the public.

Reuven Ben-Ami...a problem of management.

"No matter how much training in public relations such civil servants receive, large sectors of the public will vent their anger on them. We are thus the victims of government policy, particularly in such difficult times as today."

While admitting the existence of a number of "rotten apples" in every government department. Ben-Ami rejects the attempts to paint a picture of a civil service whose employees simply don't

The problem, he says, is primarily one of bad management. There is no other bureaucratic organization that has as many disciplinary mechanisms at its disposal as the Civil Service: "If there is an anti-work ambience in any govern department, it is nearly entire fault of the managers who failed to establish and mainta essential norms of public ser-"They are the ones also who failed to provide the sort of pe example that would make it po for them to demand adherer such norms on the part of the levels of civil servants, who a ones who come into contact the public."

BEN-AMI'S statement tells a half the truth, but it is certain! far from the whole truth abo civil service. There is no doubt that the

In the last three years number of workers in the publ vice grew by an additional 4 whereas the number in agric has dropped and that in indust remained stable.

If one adds to this picture th that the number of employpersonal and financial service at an even faster rate, there is reason to describe Israel's ecc as having a dwindling labour in production which has to she a massive load of service w who produce nothing, but manipulate, distribute and ra their own cut from the cou meagre production.

Finance ministers since the of the state have been aware problem and have periodically to attack it. To no avail. In both the public and the privat vices have burgeoned.

Yigal Cohen-Orgad's par-fo course tilting at the civil ser perks - overtime and trav lowance - would seem to be ... dication that he has chosen t at easy but pointless targets t than at the ones that de priority but that may be awesome for him to tackle. The writer is a member of diplomats should present to their Morocco in recent days. But Shultz, respective Arab host governments.

Thus, Reagan had again pressed for a freeze on Israeli settlements. He had reiterated support for his 1982 peace initiative. There had been a concerted push on Shamir and Defence Minister Moshe Arens to tone down Israel's opposition to future sales of U.S. weapons to Arab states, especially the planned Jordanian strike force which has become a key foreign policy objective of the administration.

Just before Congress recessed in November, funding for that proposal was killed, but administration officials are hoping to revive it in the next session, which convenes at the end of January.

The damage-control effort in the Arab world was well under way before Shultz visited Tunisia and a straightforward diplomat who was a chief architect of the strategy of improving ties with Israel, did not flinch during his public and private comments in North Africa. To his credit, he bluntly told them the U.S. would continue to have strong ties with Israel whether they like it or

THIS CLEARLY disconcerted several career Middle East specialists at the State Department. But because so many of their earlier assumptions had proven wrong, the secretary was in no mood to pay much attention to them.

Shultz, and Reagan, initially had lost confidence in these experts when Jordan's King Hussein failed to join the Reagan peace process. Getting the monarch to represent the Palestinians was a key ingredient of the entire U.S. scheme.

Before Reagan went public with the plan, the then assistant secretary for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, Nicholas Veliotes, had flown to Amman to consult with Hussein. Later, Reagan and Shultz felt reasonably certain that Hussein would cooperate. But by last April. Hussein had failed to receive permission from Yasser Arafat and the PLO. He said no.

Later, the then special Middle East envoy Philip Habib and other State Department Middle East advisers assured Shultz and Reagan that the Syrians could be counted on to remove their forces from Lebanon as soon as Israel and Lebanon reached a troopwithdrawal agreement. When Habib, his deputy, Morris Draper, and Veliotes were pressed on this assumption during hearing on Capitol Hill, they simply insisted that the U.S. had received such a pledge from Syrian President Hafez Assad. They took him at his word.

THUS, THE AMERICANS spent weeks working with only Israel and Lebanon to draft the agreement.

Former secretary of state Henry Kissinger warned in an American television interview that it was by no means certain the Syrians would cooperate. He recalled his own experiences with Damascus.

Arens, then the ambassador in Washington, repeatedly insisted that Assad was not interested in leaving Lebanon and that the entire exercise of mediating a strictly Israeli-Lebanese accord was futile.

But the administration did not want to listen until it was too late. It was no coincidence, by the way, that these failures resulted in a bureaucratic reshuffle last summer. Habib retired (again) and Veliotes and Draper were given new jobs. A new team was brought in.

Now the administration finally recognizes (despite all the public posturing) that its Middle East policies are in deep trouble. Prospects of Lebanese President Amin Jemayel genuinely broadening his political base by bringing in more Druse, Sunni and Shi'ite leaders are remote. The marines are bogged down - and seriously endangered. The U.S. is sucked into an increasingly aggressive, no-win military role. Domestic opposition, as expressed in Congress and in the media, is already very intense, and getting stronger.

AS A RESULT, the administration, from Reagan on down, is groping for some way to withdraw without losing too much face in the process. And that was the major reason for the upturn in ties with Israel, U.S. officials were hoping Jerusalem might come up with some solution.

Perhaps, the reasoning went, if Israel became more militarily assertive, the Syrians and their Lebanese allies might play ball. But Israel is in no mood to endanger the lives of more of its soldiers.

Given all this, there is a deep depression in Washington. America's weakness was underlined not only by the less-than-brilliant display of aerial strength during the U.S. strike against Syrian positions. but also by the willingness of moderate Arabs, even Egypt, to bully Washington.

The consequences of a precipitous U.S. disengagement, as Joseph Joffe of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace wrote on Tuesday in The New York Times, would be significant. He urged the administration not "to pick up the first available fig leaf have done little more than lead his people from one disaster to another.

In international affairs, one's reputation is an important source of power. But in this post-Vietnam era, even Reagan is unlikely to use the necessary force to get the job done. Jemayel will be the first casualty, but others will follow.

THE PALESTINIANS themselves plainly do not see things this way. For all his mistakes - and there has been considerable criticism of Arafat, both within and without the PLO - he is still very widely viewed as the most authentic voice of Palestinian nationalism.

This is true despite the two massive military defeats he has suffered in Lebanon over the past 18 months, at the hands of Israel in Beirut last year and at the hands of the Syrianbacked rebels in his own Fatah movement this year. And it only goes to underscore that there is absolutely no correlation between Arafat's military strength and his popular appeal.

Just why he is so viewed derives, first and foremost, from the fact that he has no serious rival. No one else has managed to etch himself into the mind of the Palestinians or of the world at large as the symbol of Palestinian nationalism.

It was Arafat who managed to elevate the Palestinian cause from a refugee problem in need of a humanitarian solution to a nationalist issue in need of a political solution. That is now axiomatic to most governments, including that of the U.S., but certainly was not so before Arafat arrived on the scene and endeavoured to guide the Palestinian struggle away from the stigma of terrorism towards the respectability of diplomacy.

The importance of this fact -Arafat as the living symbol of Palestinian nationalism - cannot be overestimated. And those who have tried to disregard it have done so at their peril — as Syria and its proteges in the PLO found out in their abortive attempt to unseat the PLO leader in the latest rebellion. Despite their overwhelming military strength, they were forced to let Arafat off the hook - because to destroy him would have destroyed the PLO as an authentic voice of Palestinian nationalism.

BEYOND THAT, there is something about Arafat's brand of pragmatism that appears to appeal to most Palestinians, who have never been drawn in any great numbers to the far more doctrinaire revolutionary philosophies espoused by the radical groups in the PLO — George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and Nayef Hawatmeh's Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

There appears to have been a perception that, somehow, the radical commitment to armed struggle against Israel is irrelevant to their predicament, that the promise it holds, if realizable at all, lies in the distant future. On the other hand, Arafat, with his apparent readiness to compromise and maneuver in a bid to make limited tactical gains, seems to appear to them far more relevant in the present circumstances. The hope he holds out may be slim, but it does seem more than that held out by the radicals, who, for the oresceable future, would keep the Palestinians locked in a hopeless armed struggle against an overwhelmingly powerful enemy.

These are powerful points in Arafat's favour, and they have been little affected by his miserable military performance in Lebanon.

That he has been badly beaten twice in 18 months by far more powerful enemies appears not to be seen by the Palestinians as any kind of disgrace - certainly no more disgraceful than their own humiliating defeats over the past few decades.

His very impotence in the face of overwhelming odds has come, it would seem, to symbolize their own impotence and wretchedness - if anything, increasing his popular appeal.

It would appear that nations don't always want or need great leaders. who at certain periods of their history do not reflect their reality. Thus, a war-weary Britain found it had no need for Churchill when World War II was over, and dumped him in favour of Atlee, a man cut to much smaller scale than Churchill and more in keeping with Britain's own reduced self-image. Arafat may today cut a pathetic figure. But then, the Palestinians are, at the present juncture of their history, a pathetic people. The writer is The Jerusalem Post's

Middle East affairs reporter.

A gradual integration

Outsiders don't seem to interfere with Jewish ex-Does that make sense? As concerns terrorism, Arabs are unlikely istence or identity - provided they are outsiders of the right sort. Who, then, are the wrong sort? Those creating problems of adjustment. The real reasons for opposing coexistence with the Arabs is not dissimilar to my reason for opposing coexistence with Jewish ultra-Orthodox: culture-clash.

Experience in all countries reveals that social groups develop their own specific rules of conduct, forms of cultural expression and mannerisms. Two groups cannot coalesce unless one embraces the other's code, or both embrace a common code.

I say social groups and not racial groups, because the division does not have to be racial. It can be between social classes. The issue can be mainly linguistic (Afrikaners versus English-speakers in South Africa). Strife can break out between Christian and Christian (Catholics versus Protestants in Northern Ireland).

At stake is the pressure for behavioural uniformity; society cannot stand heterogeneity. This is foolish and regrettable, but it has one thing going for it: the autagonism is not ad hominem.

The gap between Jew and Arab is far from unbridgeable. Human beings are flexible, hostility is prone to weaken as groups adapt to each

The long-term trend, in a healthy, egalitarian and democratic society, is towards concord - unless political fanaticism is invoked to keep the flames of enmity deliberately blazing.

HERE IS an example of a positive development. Anti-Semitism, the classic racial phobia, is known to be most prevalent in the middleclasses. Reason is that the Jews are a highly mobile social group, keen to climb the class ladder.

When they came to the West from Eastern Europe at the turn of the century, they belonged to the lowest social class - and did not evoke pronounced antipathy so long as they lived side by side with the equivalent proletarian class in

They managed all right in London's Whitechapel. It is when they moved to more affluent Golders Green that they encountered hostility. Now that they have belonged for two whole generations to the Britis middle-classes and have acquired the sensibilities of their gentile counterparts (through what is called crossly in Zionist circles "assimilation"), the anti-Semitism facing them is considerably reduced.

The Jews have adapted to their Western bourgeois environment and no longer evoke the rejection syndrome to any great extent, just as the Arabs in the TV debating team have adapted to the bourgeois Israeli environment and would manage to blend in most Jewish neighbourhoods (as they already do in their work places).

The rejection-and-reconciliation process is, by the way, mutual and applies in both directions. When the culture gap between Jew and gentile yawned wide, a Jewish father would don sackcloth and ashes rather than let his son marry out. Now that the gap has narrowed, Jewish "anti-gentilism" has ebbed as well.

The clash inside Israel is complicated by the state of war subsisting between the Jewish state and most of its Arab neighbours. This is a problem. It would be foolish - and dangerous - to pretend that it does not exist. But like the other divisive factors, it can be treated in two ways: positively, as an obstacle to be overcome; or negatively, as a barrier justifying perpetual animosity

The negative attitude was given expression by Mrs. Barkay, who wanted to know why, if the Arabs are such good Israelis, they don't serve in the army. The answer is that they are Israelis, but don't have to be Zionists. They cannot be expected to fight a Lewish battle against their fe' ow Arabs. And this, of course, is the point: a genuine clash of interests does exist between Jew and Arab in this country. The job of the two sides is to live with it, not to exacerbate it.

OUR CONCLUSION must be twofold: The intermingling of Jew and Arab is a process that can and will happen. But it must come at its own pace. Hurrying it may do more harm than good.

The so-called "melting-pot" process is out of fashion. It was not over-successful when the different Jewish immigrant communities were being integrated in the new Jewish state. The Lachish method was introduced instead, with separate villages for each Jewish ethnic community, constructed round a central core-township supplying common services.

Considering the negative local reactions, it might be wiser not to impose — for the moment — an Arab presence in Upper Nazareth. By the same token, Jews should be discouraged from residing in Nazareth proper. The Arabs find the intrusion of Jews into their ing area just as offensive. They want to live their Arab lives in their own Arab communities as well.

This inclination towards separatism ought to be respected on both sides. The rights of the Arabs in this respect are not one whit less valid than the rights of the Jews.

In the course of time - when peace is achieved - the Jews will get to be less aggressively Jewish and the Arabs less aggressively Arab; both will become more Israeli. The two communities will assimilate to common social behaviour-patterns.

They will remain different in religious and ethnic terms, but will move closer to equality in other fields - income, education, occupations, etc. Bit by bit, barriers will crumble.

It is a process that takes time and there is no need to accelerate it. A case of more haste, less speed. Knocking heads together for impatient idealistic reasons may sharpen the conflict instead of easing it; which would be a pity.

WHEN THE CONFERENCE was No Packing and Deligannounced, it has an immediate image problem in the Israeli press. No attempt to explain its purposes and e originality could avoid stomachturning cliches such as "bridging gaps in Diaspora-Israel understanding," "earnest dialogue," "active expression through new dynamic leadership" and so forth. Since such pretensions could not be taken seriously before the conference, the attention of the media was almost exclusively focused on the hidden political agendas and PEGI machinations of the Israeli organizers. The political dimension became cience as more to it than that. 83761 The question that struck many observers was: why should the Agency spend $30,000 on holding the three-day conference and subth sidizing the Israeli delegates' stay at a five-star hotel when the Diaspora delegates (who paid their own way) have already been to Israel five, ten, even twenty times?

The anwer was Lawrence Jackier, a 41-year-old Detroit attorney and Young Leadership "elder statesman." In a that "most of our past visits and experiences in Israel have been superlicial. I have learned more about lsraelis in the last few days than in 15 prior trips."

Another American delegate noted ruefully that "I have taken my 'first trip to Israel' at least 10 times. It is our responsibility to lead the on-the-bus, off-the-bus Young Leadership missions to Israel, but now I've had it. Next time I'll let the Romans take Masada. I'm not going up again."

THE ISRAELI delegates, too. commented on how their initial scepticism about the conference was overcome and on how pleased they were to meet this new generation of Diaspora leaders, which included academics and Jewish social service experts, as well as fund-raisers. This is particularly noteworthy considering the aversion of the average tachlis-oriented Israeli to rambling. open-ended "dialogues."

Who is this new generation? Frankel, who is in the insurance business, put it this way: "We took over the structure (of Jewish built, but we are different. We comprise the full rance of comnot speech-makers. And we are not hesitant about expressing our Jewish identities and concerns in nd Staff Require public.

are more task-oriented and resultoriented than our parents. We aren't interested in getting our pictures taken with the prime minister. And plaques and interviews in the press we can do without. What we want are ways to get personally involved with life in Israel, whether through Project Renewal, economic partnerships or Jewish education, And we want the Agency to be more efficient self-critical and accountable."

More than anything else, it has been the experience of the American UJA donors in Project Renewal that has stimulated a desire for personal involvement and the willingness to break through red tape and official channels in order to get the job done.

ON A PERSONAL LEVEL I found this new generation in their 30s and early 40s to be the same one that shared with me the formative experiences on American campuses in the 1960s. I dropped out of their world soon after graduation to come to Israel, but found them again now wearing their hats as businessmen, lawyers, professors, journalists, social service experts, and even Congressmen.

They take their Jewish responsibilities seriously, but are not awed by Israeli leaders and institutions. For their parents, the Jewish Agency was the state-in-themaking: the hope for the Jewish people after the ravages of World War II. The heads of the Jewish Agency, who later became ministers in the new State of Israel, continued to reflect a charismatic aura back on that venerable institution.

For their parents, that is, but not for them. Let's listen to what Brian Lurie, the executive director of the San Francisco Jewish Federation, who is also an ordained Reform rabbi, had to say about the Agency to the assembly plenum:

"The means we have today (to serve the needs of the Jewish people in Israel and the Diaspora) are inadequate. The politicization of the Jewish Agency must come to an end. The WZO and the Zionist parties in the Diaspora are an anachronism. Let's stop kidding ourselves."

Turning to the Israelis, he went on: Stop using the Agency as a source of jobs and political fieldoms. If not, then the money we raise (through the UJA) could be allocated to causes in Israel through channels other than the Agency. We are not bound legally to channel the money through the Agency. We divide it up among our communal institutions in the U.S. - why not here, too?

"Take Youth Aliya, which has done a magnificent job historically. What of today? Ninety-five per cent of the youth it takes care of now are from Israel, most from Project Renewal areas. We invest money in rehabilitating these areas, but the best youth of these towns is stripped away and educated elsewhere."

LURIE, who has been to Israel 25 times, was deliberately trying to prod Uri Gordon, the current head of Youth Aliya, into a critical reexamination of its functions. Lurie was asking, in effect, whether the money spent on Youth Aliya might not be put to better use elsewhere. He got no response, at least not in public.

But in a recent interview in The Jerusalem Post, Gordon displayed the typical empire-building mentality that perpetuates existing structures and interests long after their historic tasks were completed.

Casting a covetous glance at the millions of dollars now being poured into Project Renewal, he suggested that the Diaspora communities could shift the money to Youth Aliya institutions after Renewal projects were finished.

Lurie's challenge to the Agency's existing goals and structures also received no response from another Labour politician, Yehiel Leket, head of the World Labour Zionist Movement, in an address to the plenum later in the day.

LEKET'S REACTION and subsequent maneuvers at the conference point out some of the obstacles that Diaspora reformers will face in their attempt to challenge the defenders of the status quo. As a clever politician, Leket first argued that he had responded to Lurie's critical remarks. When challenged on that, he shifted gears and launched into a defence of the pervasive politicization of Israeli provocative remarks in an endearing manner. It was noted that the only non-controversial thing he said was the grace after meals, which he led at one dinner. THE SPIRIT of dialogue also prevailed in discussions of the mutual problems of Jewish identity and education. Ank Carmon of Tel-Aviv University's Israel-Diaspora Institute articulated this theme in one of the opening addresses.

He noted that most of the older generation of Israeli and Diaspora, leaders had common cultural roots in Eastern Europe. Their shared experiences and values created implicit understandings between them that didn't require the artificial stimulation of "dialogue."

What of our generation, Carmon asked. "Our backgrounds are completely different. We lack the shared, implicit cultural understandings of our grandfathers. But we face the common problem of defining the meaning of Jewish life to ourselves and our children.

"Even though for me Israel is the centre of the Jewish world, we need each other to define its Jewish meaning."

In the open atmosphere of the workshops, many Israelis, especially those originally from abroad, agreed that the Jewish identity of non-Orthodox Israeli youngsters was a problem that required new educational approaches.

Carmon, who is not Orthodox. was one of the conference organizers, and his Israel-Diaspora institute helped prepare the agenda and the discussion papers.

ONE WOULD think that the Young Leadership department - or some other organ of the WZO or the Agency - could have supplied these ideological auxiliary services. The political organizers were evidently preoccupied with other tasks, such as checking the political backgrounds of the participants.

The political interests of the Likud in the planning and operation of the conference were looked after by Herut MK Michael Kliener. For the record, it should be noted that the head of the WZO Young Leadership, Eliezer Sheffer, of the Mafdal, said nothing memorable or controversial in his several talks to the plenum. FOR ALL its effectiveness in stimulating a dialogue - or, if you will, an "authentic" dialogue between the Israeli and Diaspora participants - the conference by no means represented the full scope of "young leadership" on both sides.

Some of the most glaring imbalances were the almost complete absence of Sephardim, either Israeli or Diaspora; an over-supply of Israeli politicians and Agency-WZO funcionaries, who made up over half of the Israeli delegation; the dearth of pulpit rabbis and Jewish educators among the American group; the complete absence of any practising Reform rabbi, either israell of American delegates from South America and Europe, with only token representation from South Africa and Australia; no representatives from Gush Emunim; and the absence of delegates from the American Orthodox establishment.

These crucial omissions were due either to poor planning, insensitivity, political considerations, organizational interests or lack of response from those invited. Even though the assembly was, in effect, an American-Israel dialogue, it was a success within these limited terms.

Committees on Israel-Diaspora institutions. Jewish education, economic investment, and aliya were set up to refine ideas and proposals raised at the conference and the delegates declared their intention of meeting again next year "to continue the process."

SOME OF THE delegates noted a parallel to the meeting held almost two years ago by the Agency Board of Governors at Caesarea. which was convened to review the operation of the "reconstituted" Jewish Agency and to propose changes for the future. It was also held at a five-star hotel.

Agency chairman Arve Dulzin referred to the "Caesarea Process" during a brief talk to the conference on its final day, to note that changes will be made in the Agency. But he missed the opportunity to engage in a frank interchange with the highly motivated and intelligent audience about the problems of the Agency More interest was stimulated later in the day in a question-and-answer session with President Chaim Herzog.

The "Caesarea Process" has yielded a few position papers by now, but no change. The participants in what was inevitably dubbed the "Moriah Process" had little idea of what the Caesarea Process was all about, but were sceptical that something concocted by the older generation could yield significant reform in the goals and structure of the Agency.

Avraham Burg, son of the noted minister, said in a workshop that aliya should not be an Israeli Yet if the young leadership allows priority any more, among other their initiative to dissipate or things because it drains the become subordinated to the Diaspora communities of their best political interests and careers of the Lekets, Gordons and Sheffers, what Burg, invited to the conference as they created on the shores of the a member of Peace Now, displayed Dead Sea will be nothing more than a great facility for making a stillborn "Caesarea, Jr."

prices of manufactured goods at the gates of factories, it gives a rough estimate of inflationary tendencies for the coming weeks. According to the observers, this indicates that some months of two-digit rates of inflation may lie ahead.

The bureau calculated that an average family of four would need some 1S65,100 to buy the same goods and services it bought with 1S3,700 in 1980. The figures released yesterday showed that basic necessities have been registering the largest rates of increase. Leading the price increases were food products, which rose by 18.8 per cent during November (188 per cent in the last 12 months) and the prices of transportation and postal services, which went up by 18.7 per cent in November (172 per cent since November 1982). Other large hikes were registered in home maintenance, 17.1 per cent (179.7 per cent in the last year), education and culture, 16.7 per cent

(172.5 per cent in the last 12 months) furniture and household appliances, 15.8 per cent (172 per cent in the last 12 months) and miscellaneous, 17.2 per cent (205 per cent in the last 12 months). Below-average increases were registered in the prices of fruits and vegetables 7.8 per cent (158.1 per cent since November 1982), housing, 11.6 per cent (172.3 per cent), clothing and footwear 13.1 per cent (154.7 per cent) and health, [3.6 per cent (177 per cent).

The bureau reported that the price index of building inputs in residential building rose by 11.2 per cent during November (153.8 per cent in the last 12 months). The bureau has changed the baseline for the index to October 1983, which means that the index was set at 111.2 points on this baseline, which translates to 19.628.1 points in the old April, 1975 baseline. With the announcement of the CPI. the Treasury adjusted the income-tax brackets applicable to January's salaries.

vance on the cost-of-living allowance, but much harder not to pay it. There has been a real erosion in the pay of the workers, and they need the advance to help them finish out the month." The employers have indicated that they will pay about 18 per cent if there is a 5 per cent cut in the allowance to be paid early next year. Radoshitzky said the inflationary spiral is hastening the recession. *Consumers simply don't have the money they once had. This means that the factories will begin to produce less; then they will begin dismissing workers. Consumption will continue to drop, and so on."

He did not think that the situation could be saved by exports. Cohen-Orgad is simply not giving us a good enough deal to allow us to step up exports. If in 1983 we made a tidy profit on the local market, and this helped us to export at a very low profit, now we are moving into a period where both the local market and exports will be providing us with minimal profit, if any.

Herzog condemns vigilantism

President Chaim Herzog yesterday condemned vigilantism, or terror against terror, calling for the eradication of this dangerous phenomenon from our midst immediately and with a strong hand."

Speaking at the annual awards ceremony at Beit Hanassi for 215 outstanding Civil Guard volunteers. Herzog first recalled the busbombing in Jerusalem 10 days ago. responsibility for which was claimed by the PLO. He praised the condemnation of this crime by Arab public figures. Herzog added, however, that (Aisha Baash, 11) is no less despicable, and the planting of booby-trapped grenades in Christian churches and at the homes of Arab residents are heinous crimes. No one has the right to take the law into his own hands." The president praised the Civil Guard volunteers for their dedication. Interior Minister Yosef Burg

No bicycle licences The Jerusalem municipality has waived licences for bicycles after discovering that the bulk of bicycle owners have never applied for them.

The municipal authorities found they have no reliable means of _ supervising the licensing law and that the 1830 licence fee, and IS10 for each yearly renewal, failed to cover the cost of having licensing officials. (Itim). APPOINTMENT. — Ya'acov Markowitz, director of the Interior Ministry's police division, has been appointed assistant to Director-General Haim Kubersky. Besides his police duties, Markowitz will oversee the ministry's prisons department and emergency services department.

FOR SEVERAL YEARS, the Beth Tillot Congregation in Baltimore,

The current Beth Tfilot operation has so far brought in just over 2,000, with the most recent batch of cheques personally delivered by Mr. and Mrs. Hessin Davidson.

Key collectors for the fund are Rose Davidson, Ruth Thomas, Herman Needle and Maria Matherly, who have apparently set themselves a target of leaving no stone unturned in Baltimore. They are responsible for the huge block of contributions listed below, and we've been given to understand that Rose Davidson refuses to take "no" for an answer. To her, even a $1 contribution is important — all those dollars eventually adds up to a lot of money. As she has proved.

What makes Mrs. Davidson's effort particularly praiseworthy is that she is an octogenerian. But age has certainly not inhibited her style. She collects from old friends, new friends and total strangers to support the Toy Fund, and she spends many hours each week writing personal notes to people to acquaint them with the significance of the fund.

Equally important, she keeps meticulous lists of donors' names, addresses and sums contributed. which she copies and sends to Jerusalem together with a stack of cheques. Each name is carefully printed and totally legible.

Which brings us to a very important point: despite our pleas, the overwhelming majority of donors continue to scrawl their names in handwriting, which is often difficult to decipher. Please do try to block print when you contribute to either The Jerusalem Post Toy Fund or the Forsake Me Not campaign.

Contributions should be addressed to The Jerusalem Post Funds, POB 81, 91000 Jerusalem. Please renember to make out a separate cheque for each fund.

Winter has crept up on us slowly this year, but there's no doubt that it has arrived. There are tens of thopsands of elderly people in Israel whose homes are inadequately heated and for whom winter is the most miserable time of the year.

The main thrust of Forsake Me Not during the winter season is to provide funds for heaters, fuel, blankets and warm, lightweight jackets. How much we can provide depends on you. Help us to bring some warmth into the life of our senior citizens.

Shares plummet as inflation soars

TEL AVIV. - In advance of the announcement of the 15.2 per cent fise in the November Cost-of-Living Index the index-linked bond market put in a quiet trading session yesterday, with prices fluctuating mildly in either direction. It was all pretty much in the bag as far as the index figure was concerned," a bond dealer said. Predictions of a 15-16 pt cent rise had been made by economists and stock exchange specialists. If anything, the 15.2 per cent figure was at the bottom end of expectations.

However, those looking ahead expect a December blockbuster of 13-15 per cent.

The share market, on the other hand, went into a veritable nosedive. Actually, it was little wonder that only 157 securities fell by five per cent or more. Included in this figure were the 28 which could not be traded at all as a result of being "sellers only."

Brokers and speculators alike like to protect profits, and the only way they could do this was by selling while a profit was still to be had. A case in point were the Clal Industries shares, which earlier this week stood at their recovery high of 430. In the wake of the past two sessions the stocks closed out at 368. At these levels this was still above the 340 at which many speculators bought the shares.

Trading turnovers continued to be very moderate and totalled just at we IS474.6 million.

As has been pointed out in these columns on more than one occasion, the bank shares which are part of the Treasury agreement have a life of their own and act without any connection with the rest of the market. Yesterday was just another example. As the equity market plummeted bank shares advanced sharply, and by as much as 6.1 per cent, as was the case with Union Bank, IDB and Mizrahi b were both four per cent gainers.

The bank shares which are not part of the agreement were stung for losses. The shares of First International were 8.8 per cent lower, while both Maritime issues were on the "sellers only" list. FIBI was down by 7.6 per cent.

Mortgage bank issues were down by as much as 10.2 per cent, which was the extent of the loss of price in the Merav shares. Binyan continued to draw attention as it was "sellers only" for the second session. Ten per cent losses were absorbed by Shilton and the Federation of Contractors in the specialized financial institution group.

Success = 200% inflation

FINANCE MINISTER Yigal Cohen-Orgad and his aides probably heaved a sigh of relief yesterday because the consumer price index for November rose by almost exactly the 15 per cent they had predicted. They will, therefore, see it as a sign that inflation will slow down again and not run out of

Their relief will not be shared, however, by the very many whose take-home pay does not even come close to the average family expenditure of IS65,100 estimated by the Central Bureau of Statistics, and who have no savings to fall back upon. Moreover, as they must know from daily experience, the price index published vesterday is the average for November, and reflects neither the entire impact of the wave of price increases in the latter part of the month, nor the price hikes of December

The Bureau estimates that the price increases of the first week of December already amount to 6-7 per cent of the inflation to be expected this month. Worst hit, as usual, are those with lower than average incomes.

But even if last month's index may indicate that inflation will converge to a lower rate, any certainty that this will indeed happen is misplaced. The precondition for a flattening out of the price curve is that aggregate expenditure, public and private, will shrink significantly — and so far there are no clear-cut signs that this will happen. All the promises that the government will cut its expenditures have so far remained just that -- promises.

As for private expenditure, there are grounds for scepticism about the effect that the recent drastic cuts of real wages will have on aggregate consumption. It has lately become impolite to observe that people in the upper half of the income distribution, including the more affluent groups of salaried employees, can keep up their accustomed standard of consumption for quite a long while by shifting some of their wealth from financial assets to current consumption. Even more impolite has it become to speak of the income earned and spent in the black or grey economy, which is largely impervious to government policy.

The result, however, is that, if any impact of significance is to be achieved at all, the lion's share of the newly-imposed burden will fall upon the lower income groups. And as Mr. Cohen-Orgad will feel it politically more and more urgent to show results in the balance of payments, so the measures adopted will have to become harsher.

Whether Mr. Cohen-Orgad will be politically able to stick to his declared policy, and whether it will - no matter what the short-run social cost - achieve its objectives, is still doubtful. As for inflation, all we know so far is that it has jumped to an annual level of 200 per cent, and if the wholesale price index, which went up by 19 per cent in November, is any indicator, it will at least take some time until relative stability

While inflation has been accelerated to further the priority goal of reducing the foreign payments gap which Yoram Aridor bequeathed to his successor, whether that goal will be achieved is not at all certain. Our exports are in dire straits and the prospects for improvement are dim, even if the finance minister agrees to raise the subsidies as demanded by the exporters. On the import side, much depends not only on what happens to aggregate consumption, but also on how much of the stocks that Mr. Aridor ran down to improve the picture will have to be replenished.

Meanwhile, the erosion of real wages between October and January may amount to 40-50 per cent. The great mystery in all this is what Yeroham Meshel, the Secretary-General of the Histadrut, is doing about it. Is he waiting for spontaneous strikes so as to be carried along on the crest of the waves of discontent? Or has he quietly accepted the argument that the only alternative for the present cut in real wages is mass unemployment, which he fears even more?

Or is it that, after decades of dedicated service, Mr. Meshel is no longer up to the task of coming up with a nationally responsible, economically sound and socially acceptable alternative to the current policy?

Relief at Deir al-Kamar

ISRAEL'S role in initiating and helping to implement yester-day's evacuation of several thousand Christian refugees from Deir al-Kamar in Lebanon's Druse-controlled Shouf Mountains is something to be applauded as a humanitarian gesture

With winter fast approaching, there was every reason for concern about the fate of the refugees. They had fled to the town from the surrounding villages when the Druse militias extended their control over much of the Shouf in the battles they waged against the Christian Phalange forces, following Israel's withdrawal from the mountains earlier this year.

Obviously the agreement to evacuate the refugees could not have been reached without full negotiations with the Druse as well as the Christian leadership. The Christian community in Lebanon which in many ways feels abandoned by Israel will probably see this Israeli action as a welcome sign of some renewed involvement. The Druse may perceive it in a similar way, but from their rather different vantage point.

Yet all sides would be wise to refrain from reading profound political implications into this Israeli intervention. Caution and self-interest would dictate such restraint. And as Defence Minister Moshe Arens indicated vesterday, if there were any political implications inherent in Israel's role, it was the hope that the agreement regarding the refugees at Deir al-Kamar would help promote the larger national reconciliation that Lebanon so desperately needs.

Resolution and reservations

their bombers against targets in Lebanon, an Israeli official in Washington clapped his hand to his head and groaned: "Oh God! The world is going to think that we had something to do with it, this attack coming so close on the heels of Shamir's and Arens' visit to

Just four days earlier, that official had been one of a team of Israelis discussing future strategic cooperation with the Americans. Why, I wondered, would he be worried about the world linking America's decision, at last, to act in its own defence, and Israel's cooperation in this? After all, only a month ago the same official had been condemning the fact that the Americans had chosen to fly their wounded Marines from Beirut to Frankfurt, a journey of two hours, rather than to Haifa, just 15 minutes away with some of the best medical facilities in the world. "Weinberger is scared of the Arabs," he explained. But it still seems to me that unless there is both a show of resolution and cooperation by the two parties most dedicated to trying to translate the quasi-peace agreement of May 17 into reality, it is never going to become a reality.

THE SITUATION in Lebanon is pathetically clear: The United States will never be able to attain its two major goals of establishing a stable government under Amin Jemayel and a strong Lebanese Army as long as the population of Lebanon continues to reject the current distribution of political power and opts to serve in parochial ethnic militias rather than in the Lebanese Army. This will remain true regardless of whether the Americans have 2,000 or 20,000 Marines there. For as long as the distribution of power continues to be based on a census last taken in 1932 — almost 52 years ago — and is thus unacceptable in the new demographic reality of Lebanon, there can be no hope of political

Of Lebanon's eight brigades, two are battle-worthy. Of the 6,000-odd recruits who have been inducted into the Lebanese Army since PresiBy HIRSH GOODMAN

dent Jemayel announced compulsory conscription, over 90 per cent are Shi'ite Moslems. The Shi'ites, being the greatest potential threat to the perpetuation of Christian control of Lebanon, are not going to be trained by Jemayel to be good soldiers. For him to do so would be sharpening the knife that would eventually out his own throat.

So there can be no real hope of the rapid development of a Lebanese fighting force that could credibly protect Western interests in the country. But the Americans could not pull out. Not only would a massacre have ensued like that in the Shouf Mountains when Israel redeployed to the Awali, or the one in Sabra and Shatilla, when PLO fighters were evacuated, leaving Palestinian women and children defenceless; it would have been perceived as a tremendous Soviet-Syrian victory. The dilemma of the Americans in the weeks prior to the attack on Syrian positions was a grave one: they could achieve little by being in Lebanon; but they could not leave. In the meantime, they were sustaining casualties both in men, and in prestige.

THERE WAS NO clear consensus in the administration as to how the problem should be tackled. The Joint Chiefs of Staff want a minimal role - just visible enough to demonstrate an American presence, but unobtrusive enough to limit casualties.

The U.S. had remained militarily silent as its embassy was bombed when 240 Marines were killed, and when its aircraft were fired on by Syrian missiles. The latter is something the Syrians have studiously avoided doing to Israeli aircraft, knowing that the price for such imprudence could possibly be a huge strike against their newly-deployed air defences. But against the Americans the Syrians felt they could fire with impunity, because they obviously did not take the threat of American retaliation against the Syrians - with questionable military effectiveness but unquestionable diplomatic significance - it had turned down a French offer for concerted action against Shi'ite terrorists in Lebanon. At first, the Americans agreed to go along with the French, but they pulled out at the last moment under pressure from Defence Secretary Weinberger, supported by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Just about two weeks before the U.S. did finally send its jets in

Though the incident was a wellkept secret at the time, the Syrians and Russians knew about it, as did the Shi'ites, the Phalange, the Druse and all the other principal players in Lebanon's madcap theatre. The message was clear; don't take the Americans seriously.

WHICH BRINGS us back to our Israeli official in Washington. Here he was, just four days after discussing strategic cooperation with the Americans, wishing that they had not acted so hastily, and praying that Israel would not be linked to the attempt. How then, we asked, could he intellectually reconcile that we want to be the strategic partner of a resolute America, while at the same time wishing to dissociate ourselves from American

The answer to the question is to be found in the inherent flaw in Israeli-American relations; whereas there are solid grounds for a strategic relationship, tactical realities often place Israel and America on opposite sides of the fence. Israel wants to get out of Lebanon, not to become more enmeshed in that quagmire. Shamir and Arens therefore went to a great deal of trouble to make it clear that in no circumstances would Israel become a surrogate for the U.S. military. Israeli soldiers would not be sent into areas of Lebanon that are not of direct importance to Israel's security.

If the Americans are sensitive to casualties, the Israeli government is doubly so. According to a senior Israeli defence official, the bomb outrage at Tyre was seen as a greater danger to the government's Both Arens and Shamir understood that the Israeli public had to be reassured that the price for strategic cooperation would not be deeper Israeli involvement in Lebanon, and that there was no linkage between the two matters. Hence the attitude of our official in Washington, who must have been feeling very much like Anwar Sadat did when Israel bombed the Iraqi nuclear reactor a few days after he and Begin met in Sharm e-Sheikh.

WHEN ISRAELI and American officials get together to discuss longrange strategic cooperation, early next month, there will be a great deal of antagonism and suspicion around the table. There are differences over Lebanon, the future of the West Bank, the Reagan proposals. American support for a Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) in lordan, the sale of sophisticated U.S. weaponry to Arab clients. Israeli demands for easier terms on its aid package - and these apart from the problems directly connected with the talks, such as joint exercises and prepositioning.

But these talks will be taking place with a far better chance of success than anything that has happened before, mainly because President Reagan himself is dedicated to their success. He apparently told his advisers at meetings at Camp David before Shamir and Arens arrived that he wanted real and not cosmetic cooperation to develop. To ensure that the talks have a better chance of success, the President loaded the American delegation with State Department officials, who are apt to think more like he does, and kept both Pentagon and JCS participation as marginal as was decently possible.

Israel, too, wants success. Strategic cooperation that would mean the use of Israeli facilities for the manufacture of American stockpiles to be deployed here, the opening of U.S. markets to Israeli military goods, and the maintenance of American ships here - these would be a shot in the arm for a defence establishment that has had to lay off workers on its production lines recently, and forced to cut its budget by 2

cent over the next two years. Joint exercises would not only Justrate America's new committee to Israel's security, but world genuinely beneficial to both so The Israel Navy is faced with deteriorating balance of power. both the Mediterranean and Red Sea, while the America would like to concentrate on les ing from the Israel Air Force, Si cooperation on the tactical level is recognized here, could help me the serious rift that has develor between the defence commun of the two countries, and be brought to breaking-point by eve in Lebanon and Israel's scuttling the Jordanian RDF project.

WHAT WOULD the Americ get out of all of this? "Well," said one senior U.S. ficial, "we could give you all well-worn reasons about our f. of creeping Soviet influence, Syria's growing strength. And that would be right, just as we relating how we could use Israel carrier of sorts in one of any ola! dozens of potential scenarios

LEARNING HEBREW

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir. — There are plans to close the public ulpanim. We are both students at an ulpan sponsored by the city of Tel Aviv. The instruction is outstanding and, although the physical conditions are certainly not good, the educational quality transmitted both in formal learning of the language and the spirit which carries a love of Israel and of its paramount importance to the Jewish people, is extraordinary. It is inconceivable that integration (social, ethnic and educational) is spoken of as a primary educational goal, and yet there are plans to close the public ulpanim. which are the major vehicle for integration.

LORRAINE AND Tel Aviv. JERRY ZIMMERMAN Sir, - The Ministry of Education's threatened cuts in money for ulpanim and ulpaniot affect me as a new immigrant studying Hebrew at an ulpanit. Not everyone is able to attend Arad. full-time intensive study at an ulpan, nor is everyone suited to this method. For us, the twice-a-week evenings (or mornings) at the ulpanit provide the frame-work we need to learn. Of course, it provides additional benefits for newcomers, such as a chance to meet others in similar circumstances. Our dedicated teachers help us in more ways than just learning the language.

I believe all government departments can and should make cuts and that economies could be effected in the running of ulpaniot, such as amalgamation of classes or payment by students fees. But total closure would leave us bereft and wondering how we are going to continue studying the language we need so much before we can really feel completely "at home" here. Rehovot. MRS. PAT HAVRON

Sir, - We are two American women, living in Israel and attending ulpan at the ZOA House. Tel Aviv, three mornings a week. In addition to attending ulpan, we have work and home responsibilities, and the newest decision to save and continue to support only intensive ulpans, instead of ones such as we attend, is incomprehen-

Is this the way of saying that if we cannot attend classes daily, we should pick up and leave?

GERRI DION KAREN EITZEN

Tel Aviv.

Sir, -- As a Zionist state, Israel is supposed to attract prospective immigrants and make it easier for them to settle here. The planned cuts will make it almost impossible for young Jews to make aliya, which in the long run can only damage the country.

JOSEF FEIGENBAUM

Sir, - Practically speaking, the threatened cuts will cause many ulpanim simply to shut down and will render others ineffective due to the resultant overcrowding of classes and lack of skilled teachers.

The long-term effects of the cuts on immigration and absorption are disastrous. It is ridiculous to expect immigrants to integrate successfully in Israel without the skill that enables them to understand the world around them.

This decision also sends a clearly negative message to the large numbers of Diaspora Jews who are considering aliya but who have not yet made a firm decision.

Steps should be taken to reverse, or at least modify, these cuts before it is too late. DAVID MARGOLIUS

In its leader on December 2, The Jerusalem Post agrees, and urges that the Speaker should "press the justice minister to supply the slators with legislation" and "fill in plenum time by scheduling debates on outstanding issues.

Debates and discussion on issues of the day, yes, but more legislation? What this country needs is less, not more legislation. There certainly are many aspects of government which could stand improvement, but a moratorium on legislation, or at least a reduction in the passage of laws might prove a healthy phenomenon.

The multiplicity of laws can but lead to restrictions on human freedom and make life more complicated. Look what happens to the income tax forms as a result of successive legislation. Some day the whole structure will collapse from being unintelligible and top heavy.

have felt had he read the Lebanese press on November 26, 1983. In it, one can see a picture of a Shi'ite demonstration led by the mullahs in protest against the severance of diplomatic relations between Beirut and Teheran. The beturbaned demonstration is preceded by a sign which reads: "Each one of our homes is an embassy for the Islamic Republic."

In the same press, one can also read a statement by Akram Tlais, a politburo member in Amal's 'moderate" organization: "What Imam Khomeini does," says Mr. Tlais, "has the force of law for us
